I have worn many hats. My current work at the law library, coupled with my archival background and history degree, give me an unusual skill set. Having worked at the Tarrant County Archives from 2014-2019, I learned a great deal about local history and worked with different people around the historical preservation community. I understand the importance of preservation and community outreach. I also recognize the importance of cultivating relationships with the community in order help sustain preservation efforts. My academic background in material culture studies helps shape my understanding of what specific challenges historic structures and objects can face. I see the community's interest in local history in the law library everyday. People visiting the historic courthouse love to hear tidbits of history while they're visiting.

Some other fun facts about me? I worked for the Fort Worth Zoo for a few years, and I used to work for Half Price Books after college. I was accepted to a two-week material culture institute at Winterthur Museum, Garden, and Library, in 2012. There, I learned from a variety of material culture specialists in historic cabinetmaking, textiles, conservation, furniture, architecture, and so on. I have always found historic sites, and the objects inside them, fascinating! I have also attended a campfire cooking class at Log Cabin Village in the past!
